Hence Haggin, ppl. adj. given to butting with the head.

Bnff.[1] She's a haggin' brute o' a coo, that.

HAGG, HAGGA, see Hag, v., Hag, sb.[2]

HAGGADAY, sb. Yks. Lin. Nrf. Also in form hagoday Nrf. [h)a·gədē.] 1. A latch to a door or gate.

Yks. (Hall.) n.Lin.[1] A haggaday is frequently put upon a cottage door on the inside, without anything projecting outwards by which it may be lifted. A little slit is made in the door, and the latch can only be raised by inserting therein a nail or slip of metal. 'Old men alus calls them wooden snecks wheäre you hev to put yer finger thrif a roond hoäle e' th' door to oppen 'em, haggadays.'

2. A sanctuary ring-knocker.

Nrf. Jessopp Hist. of St. Gregory's Church (1886) 10; In the church of St. Gregory, Norwich, is a large antique knocker for use by persons seeking sanctuary. This is called a 'hagoday,' N. & Q. (1894) 8th S. vi. 188.

[1. An haguday, vectes, Cath. Angl. (1483).]

HAGGAGE, sb. Som. Dev. Also written hagage Dev.; hageg· n.Dev. [æ·gidʒ.] A term of reproach for a woman, a 'baggage'; an untidy, slatternly woman.

w.Som.[1] Dev. Dawnt 'ä' nort tü zay tü thickee slammicking gert haggage! Hewett Peas. Sp. (1892). n.Dev. Horae Subsecivae (1777) 197; What disyease than ya gurt haggage, Exm. Scold. (1746) l. 27. nw.Dev.[1]

Rhymes* (1856) 23. Slk. If I would . . . take a share of a haggis wi' them, Hogg Tales (1838) 151, ed. 1866. Rxb. A very singular superstition in regard to this favourite dish prevails in Rxb. and perhaps in other southern counties. As it is a nice piece of cookery to boil a haggis, without suffering it to burst in the pot and run out, the only effectual antidote known is nominally to commit it to the keeping of some male who is generally supposed to bear antlers on his brow. When the cook puts it into the pot, she says, 'I gie this to—such a one—to keep' (Jam.); A good fat haggies, if his purse can spare it, Ruickbie Wayside Cottager (1807) 73. Dmf. Mony a haggis that reeked an' swat, Thom Jock o' Knowe (1878) 39. Wgt. It was only a haggish, an A think ee needna mak' sae muckle din aboot it, Fraser Wigtown (1877) 363. n.Cy. Border Gl. (Coll. L.L.B.); N.Cy.[1] Nhb. Grose (1790); Like the first puffe of a haggasse, Richardson Borderer's Table-bk. (1846) VI. 309; Nhb.[1] Tripe minced small. Cum. Sometimes fruit, suet, and the minced entrails of a sheep, and sometimes only oatmeal, suet, and sugar, boiled in the large gut of a sheep. It was till lately the common custom to have this dish to breakfast every Christmas day, and some part of the family sat up all night to have it ready at an early hour. It is now used at dinner on the same day (J.L.) (1783); We'd stew'd geuse and haggish, Anderson Ballads (ed. 1808) 173; Cum.[1] A pudding of mincemeat for eating with potatoes on Christmas day. Lan. Her food . . . was haggis, made of boil'd groats, mixed with thyme or parsley, Harland & Wilkinson Flk-Lore (1867) 207; Lan.[1] Pottage made of herbs e.Lan.[1] A pudding of herbs.

HAGRI, sb. Sh.I. In phr. to ride the hagri, see below.

There is an old Shetland expression: 'to ride de hagri'—'hagri' being an O.N. hag(a)reið: skattald-ride. In former times neighbouring proprietors used to ride in company around their skattald-boundaries in order to inspect the marches, or put up new march-stones, and thus prevent future disputes. Every year, when this was done, they took with them a boy, the son of some crofter, residing on one or other of the properties. At every march-stone they came to, the boy got a flogging: this, it was thought, made him remember the place ever after. For every year this 'hagri' or skattald-riding was done, a different boy was selected to accompany the proprietors and receive the floggings, JAKOBSEN Dial. (1897) 109.

HALGAVER COURT, phr. Cor. See below.

The people of Bodmin had an old custom of assembling . . . on Halgaver Moor in . . . July, and electing a 'Mayor of Misrule,' for the punishment of petty offenders. . . . When these mates meet with any raw serving-man or other young master, who may serve and deserve to make pastime, they cause him to be solemnly arrested for his appearance before the Mayor of Halgaver, where he is charged with wearing one spur, or wanting a girdle, or some such like felony, and . . . judgment is given in formal terms, and executed in some one ungracious prank or other. Hence is sprung the proverb, when we see one slovenly apparelled, to say 'He shall be presented in Halgaver Court,' HUNT Pop. Rom. w.Eng. (1865) 402–3, ed. 1896.

3. pl. An exclamation used by children to claim half the value of any treasure found by another; also in phr. haavers and shaivers.

Sc. The beggar exclaimed, like a Scotch schoolboy, when he finds anything, 'Nae halvers and quarters, hale o' mine ain, and nane o' my neighbour's,' Scott Antiquary (1816) xxiii; Nae bunchers, nor halvers, But a' my ain, Chambers Pop. Rhymes (ed. 1870) 145; When one of a party unexpectedly finds a piece of money or other article of value, the first in calling halfers is supposed to have a right to share to that extent with the finder (Jam. Suppl.). Per. (G.W.) Lth. Haavers and shaivers. If one who sees another find anything exclaims in this language, he is entitled to the moiety of what is found. If he who is finder uses these terms before any other, he is viewed as having the sole right to the property (Jam.); The phr. more fully is 'haavers and shaivers, and hale o' mine ain.' This is pronounced indiscriminately by the finder and by one who claims a share (ib.). e.Lth. Gin the lairds could see an inch afore their nose, they wad be glad to cry haavers raither than tine a', Hunter J. Inwick (1895) 89. N.Cy.[1] If, however, the finder be quick, he exclaims 'No halfers—findee keepee, lossee seekee,' which destroys the claim, and gives him the sole right to the property. Nhb.[1] Another formula is: 'Ne halfers; ne quarters; ne pin points; Nyen o' me neybors; aall me aan.' s.Chs.[1]

4. adj. Of cattle or stock: held in partnership.

There's no harbour at D, so they've ta'en a house at H. There's no other harbour to be got. Oxf. (G.O.), w.Som.¹

Hence (1) Harbourage, sb. stopping-place, entertainment; (2) Harbouration, sb. a collection, lodgement; a collection of anything unpleasant.

(1) w.Som.¹ Noa· aa·rbureej yuur! [No shelter here!] is the usual reply to a tramp. I heard a bleak moor described as 'lig u dai·zaa·rt, u-dhaew·t aj·, aew·z, ur aa·rbureej' [like a desert, without hedge, house, or harbourage]. (2) Chs.¹; Chs.³ Oi ne'er seed sich a harbouration o' dirt as that is. s.Chs.¹ Mahy sai·ks ülahy·v! wot ŭ aa·rbŭrai·shŭn ŭ rŭb·ich dhŭr iz i dhŭ aays [My sakes alive! what a harbouration o' rubbitch there is i' the haïse].

3. The place where a deer lies or has been lying; the bed of a deer.

out of his harbour. n.Dev. When he [the stag] has settled himself down he is said to be 'in harbour,' JEFFERIES Red Deer (1884) vi.

Hence Harbourage, sb. a covert, lair, hiding-place.

w.Som.[1] The deer made for Bollam Wood, but there was no harbourage there.

4. v. To give shelter to; to hide; to entertain, give house-room to.

Ayr. We had committed the unpardonable sin against the prelacy of harbouring our minister and his destitute family, GALT Gilhaize (1823) xvii. n.Yks.[4] Gen. used in a derogatory sense. 'Sha's neeawaays neyce whaw sha harbours.' 'Tha'd harbour tha devil if tha thowt tha c'u'd mak owt byv it.' w.Yks. (J.W.) Chs.[1] He harbours aw th' poachers i' th' country; Chs.[3], n.Lin.[1], Oxf. (G.O.) Glo.[1] Her says her won't harbour the dog in the parlour. w.Som.[1] 'Tis a place where they do harbour thieves and all sorts o' rough car'ituns. Cor. And 'cused me for harbren hes booay to my house, TREGELLAS Tales (1860) 5.

Hence Harberous, adj. hospitable, affording shelter.

Sc. He liberal was and harberous, ROGERS Three Reformers (1819) 114.

5. To pet, spoil, make much of.

s.Pem. Ye'v alwiz been harbarin' this child, an' naw a's spoilt (W.M.M.).

6. Phr. to harbour laze, to induce or encourage laziness.

s.Wor. PORSON Quaint Wds. (1875) 20.

7. To dwell in a place; to haunt, frequent.

n.Cy. (J.W.) Chs.[1] Rats harbour in a barn. Partridges harbour amongst turnips; Chs.[3] They harbour there continually. Glo.[2] w.Som.[1] The police kept watch on the places he was known to harbour. Her told em how he did'n harbourey there.

8. Of a deer or stag: to have a lair; to haunt, frequent.

w.Som.[1] To ascertain by tracking, or other means, that the deer is harbouring or laired in a particular spot or covert. n.Dev. If a man could steal a view of 'un, . . where he harbours, WHYTE-MELVILLE Katerfelto (1875) xv.

9. To track a stag to its lair.

w.Som.[1] n.Dev. To use woodman's language, he had fairly 'harboured his deer,' WHYTE-MELVILLE Katerfelto (1875) xvi; A guinea is paid for each stag 'harboured' successfully, JEFFERIES Red Deer (1884) vi.

Hence Harbourer, sb. hunting term: a man whose duty it is to track out a stag's lair or 'harbour.'

w.Som.[1] The harbourer . . . is as important an officer in the establishment of a pack of hounds kept for hunting the wild deer as the huntsman himself. Indeed it would be well if every huntsman was to serve a novitiate as harbourer. It unfortunately happens that every under-keeper and loiterer about the haunts of the wild deer, thinks he can act as harbourer, COLLYNS, 76. Dev. The harbourer having reported a 'warrantable deer' in Parsonage Wood, Mem. Rev. J. Russell (1883) xii. n.Dev. He has earned an unchallenged right to call himself the most skilful 'Harbourer' in the west, WHYTE-MELVILLE Katerfelto (1875) xvi.

[1. I was a straunger and nedy of harboure, UDALL Erasm. Par. (1548) Matt. xxv. 2. An harbar, hospicium, Cath. Angl. (1483).]

n.Lin.[1] 'I shooted wi' all my hardness,' that is, I called as loud as I could.

4. Big, strong, robust, well-grown; growing, full-grown.

s.Cy. (Hall.) I.W.[1] 'He's a gurt hard bwoy,' he's a strong robust lad; I.W.[2] Dor. The youngest son hizzelf a hard bwoy o' nine, Why John (Coll. L.L.B.); A 'hard boy' means a boy of such an age and stoutness as to be able to do almost or quite a man's work, a boy from 16 to 19 years of age (O.P.C.); Barnes Gl. (1863). Som. Hard people, adults, Jennings Obs. Dial. w.Eng. (1825); Full grown, as hard stock or sheep. Hardboy, a boy of about 13 years old, W. & J. Gl. (1873); (W.F.R.) w.Som.[1] The word does not mean full-grown—it rather means growing. A 'hard boy' is a most common description of a strong lad, fit to work. So we hear of a 'hard colt,' 'hard slips' (young pigs of either sex), a 'hard maid'—this means a strong, growing lass.

Hence Hardish, adj. strong, robust, well-grown.

Wil. When I wur up a ardish bwoy, Rhymes, 5th S. 136; (G.E.D.) Dor.[1] When I wer up a hardish lad, 254. Som. When he was up a hardish lad, and without thought, Raymond Love and Quiet Life (1894) 207; Joseph Pierce! whom he had known from the first—who was up a hardish lad when he was a child, *ib. 8. Half-drunk. Yks. (Hall.), w.Yks.[4]

9. A term used in fitting in joinery, masonry, &c.; see below.

Cai.[1] Having certain inequalities of surface which prevent close contact at parts. At such places the surfaces are said to be hard, i.e. something must be pared off to make a perfect fit. Abd. When two pieces of wood, &c. that are to be fitted together, are close at one place and not at another, they are said to be hard where they thus come into close contact (Jam.).

Hence Hard, sb. the place where two pieces of wood join too closely together. Abd. (ib.)

10. Convex as opposed to concave.

w.Som.[1] In planing a true surface, any convex part is said to be hard; if concave, 'slack.' nw.Dev.[1] Used in mow-making in the sense of convex. 'I zim the moo's purty hard jis' yur,' i.e. certain sheaves project at this point.

22. The stoned part of a road as distinguished from the sides.

Lin. The middle of a road is . . . called 'the hard' to distinguish it from the sides, which are not stoned. There was a trial at Lincoln assizes concerning certain encroachments . . . made on a highway. . . One chief matter in dispute was whether land had been taken in within fifteen feet of the middle of the 'hard.' The 'hard' is sometimes used to distinguish a raised footpath from the rest of the highway. This however is uncommon, N. & Q. (1881) 6th S. iv. 38. n.Lin.[1]

23. A small marble. Som. (Hall.)

24. pl. Torches made of rags dipped in tar.

HARE-HUNT, sb. Dev. See below.

A stag and a hare hunt are the rude means employed by a village community for maintaining its standard of morals or expressing its disapprobation of petticoat rule. . . The hare-hunt, now extinct, was intended to ridicule the man who submitted to a rough woman's tongue, BARING-GOULD Red Spider (1887) xxiv; The hunt ends with the stag or hare, one or the other, being fagged out, and thrown at the door of the house whose inmates' conduct has occasioned the stag or hare hunt. . . If the hunt be that of a hare the pretence is—or was— made of knocking it on the head, ib. xxvi.

2. Phr. hark the robbers, a children's game; see below.

Ir. The Belfast version is practically the same [as the Deptford one] except that the verses are not sung as a dialogue, but by all the players together, and the prisoner, when caught, has the choice of sides, by being asked 'Which will you have, a golden apple or golden pear?' GOMME Games (1894) 197. w.Yks. ib. 196. Shr. The first six verses are sung by the alternate parties, who advance and retire tramping their feet, at first, to imitate the robbers. The last verse is sung altogether going round in a ring, ib. 198. Nrf. Two girls take hold of hands, and another, the prisoner, stands between them. The rest form themselves into a line opposite, and advance and retreat while singing the first verse, the gaolers singing the next verse, and so on alternately, ib. Ken. In the Deptford version two girls join hands, holding them up as an arch for the other players to tramp through. The first two verses are sung first by one and then by the other of the two girls. At the finish of these the girl then going through the arch is stopped, and the third, fourth, and fifth verses are sung by the two girls alternately. Then finally both girls sing the last verse, and the child is sent as prisoner behind one or other of the two girls. . . The two sides thus formed then proceeded to tug against each other, and the strongest side wins the game, ib. 197; In the Shipley version, the children form themselves into two lines, while two or three, representing the robbers, swagger along between them. When the robbers sing the last verse they should have attained the end of the lines of children, as during the parley they were safe; having pronounced the defiance they run away. The children in the lines rush after them, and should catch them and put them in prison, ib. 198. [For further details see GOMME ib. 192-199.]

Inside, it was so full of fine soft feathers, that it quite justified the name it bears among the country lads of a 'hat full of feathers,' DAVIES Rambles Sch. Field-Club (1875) xviii; Shr.[1] (b) Shr.[1] (5) w.Som.[1] The players range their hats in a row against a wall, and each boy in turn pitches a ball from a line at some twenty-five feet distance into one of the hats. The boy into whose hat it falls has to seize it and throw it at one or other of the others, who all scamper off when the ball is 'packed in.' If he fails to hit, he is out and takes his cap up. The boy whose cap is left at the last has to 'cork' the others—that is, to throw the ball at their bent backs, each in turn stooping down to take his punishment. (6) e.Suf. (F.H.) (7) Sc. He contented his politeness with 'giving him a hat,' touching, that is, his bonnet, in token of salutation, and so left the shop. SCOTT Nigel (1822) ii.

3. v. To cover a stook of corn with some of the sheaves. Cf. hattock, sb.[1]

w.Som.[1] To doubly cap-stitch—i. e. to set up the sheaves in a large stook and to cover down the top with a kind of thatch made of some of the sheaves with the ear downwards. This method is very common in 'lappery' seasons, and it prevents the corn from sprouting, while at the same time it allows the wind to pass through, and so dry the straw. Dev. A hat is much larger than a 'cap-stitch,' but not so large as a 'wind-mow.' 'I reckoned to a-car'd thick piece o' wheat, but he id'n 'ardly fit, not eet, zo I told em to go and hat'n up,' Reports Provinc. (1884) 19.

w.Mid. One player throws the ball upon the sloping roof of a building, at the same time calling out, 'Hauly-cauly (boy's name).' If the boy named can catch the ball before it touches the ground he throws it up again and calls upon someone else to do likewise; but if not, he picks it up and throws it at one of the others, who scatter to avoid being hit. Any boy he may hit has to pay a penalty, which he incurs himself if he misses. At the end of the game those who have incurred penalties must place one of their hands against the wall and allow one of the others to throw at it once for each penalty they have incurred. Formerly very popular in this neighbourhood (W.P.M.). Slang. A game played in Commoners [Winchester College]. It was played with a red india-rubber ball. As far as I know the game consisted in the boy who got possession of the ball selecting another boy whom he tried to hit with it, the object of the latter being either to escape the ball when thrown at him, or to catch it, Shadwell Wykehamical Slang (1859–1864).

HAWSEMAN, sb. Nrf. One of the crew of a fishing-boat.

Used by wherry-men on the broads (E.G.P.); The master, mate, hawseman, wheelman, net-roper, and me, lived aft in the cabin (of the herring-fishing-boat), EMERSON Son of Fens (1892) 58; One of the crew of a fishing boat, i.e. a boat engaged in catching herrings by drifting with nets. He is a superior member of the crew and stands forward when shooting the nets. When the nets are hauled the hawseman again goes forward and casts off the rope and lets go the 'tizzard' (a rope from the ship to the warp). When 'the nets are pulled alongside he unbends the seizings and passes them to the net-roper. After that the hawseman helps to salt the herrings in the wings (P.H.E.).

HAWSEN, sb. Sh.I. The curved board near the bow or stern of a fishing-boat.

'Ye see,' William answer'd, pointin' ta da hawsen, 'whaur yon rive is,' Sh. News (Dec. 17, 1898); Second or third from the keel (J.I.).

2. Phr. (1) hay abouts, an order given in drill; see below; (2) to make sweet hay, see below.

(1) Hrt. The gen. acknowledged tradition respecting raw recruits training for the Hrt. Militia is that they were generally found to be ignorant concerning which was the right and left when marching, so that a hay-band was fastened to the right leg and a straw band to the left, that they should be able to distinguish the difference, and instead of the words, 'right,' 'left' being used during drilling the sergeant called out, 'Hay-band,' 'Straw-band.' Hence the term Hay-abouts, Hrt. Merc. (June 23, 1888). (2) Dev. The field rang with laughter, and occasional screams, as a man twisted a cord of hay, cast the loop round a girl's neck, drew her head towards him and kissed her face. That is called 'the making of sweet hay,' BARING-GOULD Red Spider (1887) xxii.

II. Dial. uses. 1. pers. pron. in comb. He-said or -say, a rumour, hearsay; gen. in phr. to be neither he-said nor she-said.

Wm. It's nowder he-said ner she-said, it's here i' print (B.K.). w.Yks. Used to affirm that a statement is not made from hearsay but from actual experience or observation. 'Ah saw it mysen, so it's nawther he say nor she say' (S.K.C.).

2. Used redundantly, esp. after proper names.

Bnff. If ye burn Auchindoun, Huntly he will head ye, GORDON Chron. Keith (1880) 303. s.Wm. Josee he's a yow dead, HUTTON Dial. Storth and Arnside (1760) l. 99. w.Yks. (J.W.) nw.Der.[1] Ned Wilson he said, &c. n.Lin.[1] Dr. P. he says to me, 'Mrs. D.,' he says, 'it's ovverharassment o' th' liver 'at yer sufferin' from.' Wor. (H.K.) Nrf. The king he ha' browt me into his charmbers, GILLETT Sng. Sol. (1860) i. 4. Suf.[1] Jack he go to skule. Mr. Johnson he have two sons (s.v. Have). s.Cy. (J.W.) Sus.[1] Master Tumptops, he's a man as you'll notice mostly happens along about anyone's dinner-time.

3. Used of fem. or inanimate objects: she, it. Also used impers.

Sh.I. He wis a bonny morning, HIBBERT Desc. Sh. I. (1822) 224, ed. 1891; Dere hit bides till he lichtens in da moarnin, CLARK N. Gleams (1898) 41. s.Chs.[1] Wot)n yŭ thingk· ŭbŭw't dhis gy'aa·rdin-aach· ?—Ahy thingk ey(d dóo wi ŭ fresh kóout u pee·nt [What'n yŏ think abowt this garden-hatch?—I think hey'd do wi' a fresh cooat o' peent], 67. Stf.[1] Nhp.[2] 'A' is used for 'he,' 'she,' and sometimes 'it,' 1. War.[1]; War.[2] 'She broke the winder.' 'Did ä?' 'The cat's stole yŏ'r mate.' ''As ä?' w.Wor.[1] Thar a [she, it] comes. s.Wor.[1] Most inanimate objects are spoken of as 'he,' the chief exceptions being a boat, a church-bell, a cricket-ball, a fire-engine, and a railway-train, which are always 'her.' 'He's a good lock,' 9. Shr.[1], Hrf. (R.M.E.) Glo. 'Ow does the twoad of a wife do?' 'He lees a-bed loik a leddy,' LYSONS Vulgar Tongue (1868) 46; There is a prov. that everything in Glo. is 'he' except a tom-cat, and that is always 'she' (S.L.); Glo.[1]; Glo.[2] 11. Sur. N. & Q. (1878) 5th S. x. 222. Sus. (R.B.), Hmp. (H.C.M.B.), n.Hmp. (E.H.R.) s.Hmp. That there moon... he's hurrying away, VERNEY L. Lisle (1870) xx. Wil.[1] Marlborough folk are traditionally reputed to call everything 'he' but a bull, and that they always call 'she' (s.v. Comical). Dor. 'He' is used without much apparent distinction in Purbeck. I have heard it said of a gun-boat, 'He's just left Worbarrow.' Of a hen, 'He's now laying.' A cow also is 'he.' Of a picture, 'He did use to hang over yonder' (C.W.); Things are taken as of two classes: (1) the personal class of formed individual things, as a man, a tree, a tool; and (2) the impersonal class, of unformed quantities of things, as a quantity of hair, or wood, or water. 'He' is the personal pronoun for the personal class, and 'it' for the impersonal. A tree is 'he,' and some water is 'it,' BARNES Sng. Sol. (1859) Notes, iii; They looked at the dairyman's cart, and he's got none neither! HARDY Wess. Tales (1888) II. 186-7. Som. Eze, he be their mother, WILSON Dial. (1855) 10; He idden in the drawer to-day, RAYMOND Tryphena (1895) 38. w.Som.[1] The universal nom. pronoun to represent all things living or dead, to which the indefinite article can be prefixed. 'He' is used in speaking of a cow or a woman, but not of corn, water, wool, salt, coal, or such things as are not individual, but in the mass. Dev. He's a nice motherly shawl, LAWSON Upton Gl. (1884) 9. n.Dev. Ha [she] bed tha zet down, Exm. Scold. (1746) l. 167. nw.Dev.[1] [Amer. He's a whole team and the dog under the wagon, LOWELL Biglow Papers (ed. 1866) 199.]

4. Emphatic form of the acc. or dat.: him, her, it. Cf. en, pron.

Nhp. When him's busy us goes and does a day's work for he (F.P.T.). War. Us are going with he (N.R.). Wor. He said he'd bring he a canary and he was to get he a goldfinch (H.K.). Hrf. ELLIS Pronunc. (1889) V. 73. Oxf. 'Wurs my showel?' HEAF, sb.[1] and v. n.Cy. Cum. Wm. Yks. Lan. Also written heeaf Wm. n.Yks.[12]; and in forms haaf n.Yks.[2]; heave n.Cy. w.Yks. [h)īf, h)iaf.] 1. sb. Accustomed pasture-ground of sheep; also used fig. Cf. heft, sb.[2] n.Cy. GROSE (1790). Lakel.[1] The place where a mountain or fell sheep is born, and where it continues to live and pasture, is called its Heaf. Cum. All Helvellyn is divided into pastures which are stinted in the number of sheep allowed to graze on them. . . These separate pastures, though they have no walls to divide them, are very clearly marked out by usage and tradition in our minds, and are called 'heafs'; we all know our separate 'heafs,' and we train our flocks to know them too, Cornh. Mag. (Oct. 1890) Helvellyn, 381; Each flock has its separate heaf, or distinct walk, several miles perhaps in circuit, MARSHALL Review (1808) I. 201; He had right of heaf for four or five hundred sheep upon the Common, WATSON Nature Wdcraft. (1890) v; It is often said the heaf is outstocked when too many of a family are kept at home, or an establishment is unwisely enlarged—'mair ner t'heaf'ill carry,' N. & Q. (1873) 4th S. xi. 58. Wm. Turns em oot ontet heeaf, Spec. Dial. (1880) pt. ii. 7; Some of the largest farms have most extensive 'heafs,' Gent. Mag. (May 1890) 528. n.Yks.[2] A scant heeaf. ne.Yks. Common throughout the north-eastern moors, N. & Q. (1872) 4th S. x. 423. e.Yks. The haunt or habitual pasture of sheep, on a common, MARSHALL Rur. Econ. (1788). w.Yks. (J.W.); HUTTON Tour to Caves (1781). ne.Lan.[1]

Hence Heaf-ganging or -going, (1) vbl. sb. of sheep: the act of returning to their native pasture when they have been taken away; (2) ppl. adj. accustomed to keep to the particular 'heaf' which has been assigned to them; belonging to one flock on a certain portion of the fell.

(1) Cum. This love of home-going or heaf-ganging among the mountain sheep is as remarkable as is wonderful their knowledge of the just boundaries of their heafs or pasture-homes, Cornh. Mag. (Oct. 1890) Helvellyn, 382. (2) Lakel.[1] Heaf-going sheep remain as one flock upon a certain portion of the fell, and are usually sold with the farm to which that portion of the fell is apportioned. Cum. Oor sheep are aw 'heaf-gaen' sheep, Cornh. Mag. (Oct. 1890) Helvellyn, 380; Two or three thoosan heaf-gangen sheep, SARGISSON Joe Scoap (1881) 189; Cum.[1] Cum., Wm. It is now some years since the fell-flocks which in rustic speech were termed 'heaf-gangin sheep' began to be styled in advertisements 'heath-going sheep.'..Their instinct is well known,—to preserve their place on the fell, the spot which by prescriptive right has been accorded to the farm they belong to, N. & Q. (1872) 4th S. x. 201.

2. Of persons: an abode, residence; an habitual haunt.

n.Yks.[1] Nat at yamm? then mebbe he'll be at Willy N.'s. That's a noted heeaf o' hisn (s.v. Hofe); n.Yks.[2] A man's awn heeaf. ne.Yks. N. & Q. (1872) 4th S. x. 423.

Hence (1) Heeaf-hod, sb. the home or homestead; the source of a spring, the fountain from which the stream runs; (2) -hooal, sb. a place of shelter.

(1) n.Yks.[2] Hoore's his heeaf-hod? [where does he live?] (2) ib.

3. v. To settle a new flock of sheep on its own pasture, to accustom a flock to a certain pasture; of sheep: to cling to the same spot; also used fig.

Lakel.[1] Cum. A lamb that probably had not been more than six weeks upon the pasture where it was heafed or homed, Cornh. Mag. (Oct. 1890) Helvellyn, 382; If some one else who was a commoner chose to settle or heaf his sheep on my heaf I could not prevent him, but custom and good-fellowship prevent him, ib. 384. Cum., Wm. When a new flock is sent to find its own subsistence [in the fells] some person usually goes and stays for a time to see the sheep heafed; for if disturbed by neighbouring sheep . . . or assailed by dogs at first 'the silly sheep' might never afterwards be able to maintain their right, N. & Q. (1873) 4th S. xi. 58. n.Yks.[1] 'Guinea-fowls is desper't' bad to heeaf.' In reference to their unwillingness to forsake the old home and adopt a new one. ne.Lan.[1] Tending sheep or cattle on a mountain.

4. Of persons: to accustom or reconcile oneself to a place; to settle down, make oneself at home.

Lakel.[1] People who cling to their home or birthplace, are said to heaf themselves to it; Lakel.[2] They'll like when they get heafed. Cum. So, Miss, you have come to see your sister heafed in Westmoreland, N. & Q. (1873) 4th S. xi. 58. Wm. Amakly ta heeaf mesell, a sang naarly ot' wae, Spec. Dial. (1877) pt. i. 9; Nivver heed ye'll heaf tul't when ye gitten a barn or twea (J.M.). n.Yks.[2] Hae ye gitten heeaf'd to t'spot?

5. To lodge, reside, live.

n.Yks.[1] Deeavid ha' left t'au'd spot, an' hes heeaf'd wiv yoong John Garbutt at t'Grains sen Marti'mas (s.v. Hofe); n.Yks.[2] Where do you heeaf?

Hence Heeafing, sb. a lodging, abode.

n.Yks.[2] Hoor wilt thou be for heeafing?

(1) Sh.I. It has long been a popular belief that when any person is emaciated with sickness, his heart is worn away... The patient seeks out a cunning woman, who . . . melts some lead, and allows it to drop through an open sieve into cold water. If an image, bearing some faint resemblance to the heart, is after a certain number of trials, produced, it is an indication that the charm has been successful; but if no such figure appears, it is a sign that the decay of this organ is irremediable, HIBBERT Desc. Sh. I. (1822) 274, ed. 1891; A small quantity of lead was melted in a kollie, and the patient was set in the meat kettle before the fire. On the head was placed a blind sieve, in the centre of which a bowl of water was set. A pair of steel scissors or two keys were held in the hand of the operator in the form of a cross, and through the bool of the scissors or key the molten lead was poured into the water. The numerous shapes assumed by the lead were carefully examined, and the operation was repeated until a piece was found in form like the human heart. This was sewn in the left breast of some article of underclothing and worn by the patient for three moons. Further, the water used in this ceremony was made into porridge, of which the patient partook seated in the guit o' da door at the hour of sunset. In casting the heart attention was paid to the moon: for the aaber heart-wear the time chosen was the waning moon and the ebbing-tide, and for the feckless form the opposite was deemed the most fitting time, SPENCE Flk-Lore (1899) 156. (c) Shr.[1] Obsol. A kind of vertical, sliding shutter across the doorway of a barn, made to fit into grooves in such a way that it can be lifted, or 'aived, out at pleasure. When grain was thrashed on the barn-floor with a 'thrashal' [flail], the heaver was employed to close up the lower part of the barn door-way, and so prevent the grain escaping by the—otherwise—open door of the barn. Glo.[1] A low board fitted into slots in the barn door to keep out poultry, &c. (2) Nrf. A term with corn- and coal-porters, for lifting a sack either by two men upon the shoulders of a third, or by means of a frame on which the sack is placed (W.W.S.).

2. Comp. (1) Heave-gate, a gate which has to be lifted out of the sockets or mortises, in order to open it; (2) -up, a disturbance, fuss.

(1) Ken.[1] The sockets or mortises otherwise keep it in place, and make it look like a part of the fence; Ken.[2] Sur.[1] A gate made entirely of wood without any iron about it, and so contrived that one end lifts off the post. These gates are fast disappearing, and are only met with in the Weald. Sus. (S.P.H.), Sus.[1] (2) Dev.[1] A huges heave-up truly if her had'n had a farding to marry such a stingy hunks, 6.

3. Phr. (1) heave an' down thump, bluntly, with emphatic directness; (2) to heave the hand, to give alms, bestow charity; gen. used iron. of one who gives in very small quantities.

(1) m.Yks.[1] He came out with it, hêave-an'-down-thump. Aye, it's all hêave-an'-down-thump with him. (2) n.Yks.[1]; n.Yks.[2] Ay, ay, he has heaved his hand, he's a generous John. m.Yks.[1]

4. To lift a person from the ground in accordance with an old custom; see below.

Lan. It is customary for the lasses on Easter Monday ti 'heave' the lads, i.e. ti lift them up from the ground in their arms. On Tuesday the lads heave the lasses, Henderson Flk-Lore (1879) ii. War.[3] Formerly a custom in Birmingham. 'A young man whom she was heaving fell.' Shr. On Monday the men 'heaved' the women and on Tuesday the women the men. . . Parties of young men went from house to house carrying a chair decorated with evergreens, flowers, ribbons, a basin of water, and a posy. . . The posy was dipped in water, and the young woman's feet sprinkled with it 'by way of a blessing,' while she was held aloft in the gaily-adorned chair. . . The chair must be lifted from the ground three times and turned round in the air, and the feet then sprinkled. . . . The heaving party were rewarded by a kiss, and generally, when men were heaved, by a gift of money. Those who refused to be heaved had to pay forfeit, Burne Flk-Lore (1883) 336, 337; Last week [Easter week, 1876] they'd holiday, it was wet, else i was to go out and see the wenches heaving the men o' the Tuesday—it seems they carry that on about here as much as ever, but they expect the men to give 'em money after and that looks bad, I doubt, Lett. in N. & Q. (1876) 5th S. v. 453. Hrf.[2] On Monday they hove the women, on Tuesday the men. A party would go round to the farmhouses and cottages, the youngest wench carrying a bunch of flowers. Entering the house the party would sing 'Jesus Christ is risen again.' Then seize the women one by one and putting them in a chair turn them round, while the girl with the flowers would dip them in a basin of water and sprinkle with them the women's feet.

Hence (1) Heaving, (a) vbl. sb. the custom of lifting or raising from the ground; (b) ppl. adj. employed or engaged in 'heaving'; (2) -day, sb. a day on which the custom of 'heaving' was carried out, e. g. Easter Monday or Tuesday; (3) -Monday, sb. Easter Monday; (4) -Tuesday, sb. Easter Tuesday.

(1, a) Lan. This singular custom formerly prevailed in Manchester, Harland & Wilkinson Flk-Lore (1867) 233. Lan., Chs. On the first day a party of men go with a chair into every house to which they can get admission, force every female to be seated in their vehicle, and lift them up three times with loud huzzas. For this they claim the reward of a chaste salute, which those who are too coy to submit to may get exempted from by a fine of one shilling, and receive a written testimony, Brand Pop. Antiq. (ed. 1873) 155. n.Wal. The custom of heaving upon Monday and Tuesday in Easter week is preserved, ib. 156. Shr. Even in the collieries, where it has lingered longest, heaving is said to be very much on the decline, and elsewhere in the county it is, as a general public custom, dead, Burne Flk-Lore (1883) 340. Hrf.[2] (b) Shr. The heaving party, Burne Flk-Lore (1883) 337. (2) s.Stf. We did ha' some fun last hayvin-day, Pinnock Blk. Cy. Ann. (1895). War.[2] The idea of 'lifting' seems to have been designed to represent our Saviour's Resurrection; War.[3] Complainant pleaded that it was heaving day. Shr.[1] (3, 4) Hrf.[2]

5. To make an effort to raise or lift oneself; to struggle, lift with difficulty.

Lan. So they hove, an' poo'd, an' grunted, Waugh Heather (ed. Milner) I. 162; For when we'd'n mede shift to heyve an creep fro underth' hey, Tim Bobbin View Dial. (ed. 1806) 61.

6. Of a coal-mine: to 'creep,' rise up owing to the insufficiency of coal left to support the roof. Nhb. (R.O.H.) Nhb., Dur. Coal Tr. Gl. (1888).

7. To rise up, to come into view.

The haunt which a sheep adopts, in the language of shepherds, is called its 'haft,' Young Annals Agric. (1784–1815) XXVII. 185. N.Cy.[1]

2. v. To accustom sheep to a new pasture.

Slk. (Jam.) Gall. I had been 'hefting' (as the business is called in our Galloway land) a double score of lambs which had just been brought from a neighbouring lowland farm to summer upon our scanty upland pastures. Now it is the nature of sheep to return if they can to their mother-hill, or at least to stray farther and farther off, seeking some well known landmark. So, till such new comers grow satisfied and 'heft' (or attach) themselves to the soil, they must be watched carefully both night and day, Crockett Standard Bearer (1898) 6; Animals are said to be hafted, when they live contentedly on strange pastures, when they have made a haunt, Mactaggart Encycl. (1824).

Hence Hefter, sb. a man employed to watch sheep, when first taken to a new pasture, to prevent them breaking dike.

Gall. Ye'll no' dee like the hefter o' the Star, . . when he cam to heft hoggs, Crockett Moss-Hags (1895) xli.

3. To dwell, live; to cause or accustom to live in a place, to become domiciled. Gen. in pp.

HELLY, HELLYA, see Holy, Helyack.

HELM, sb.[1] Sc. Nhb. Cum. Wm. Yks. Also Suf. [h)elm.] 1. A covering; the top or head of anything.

n.Cy. Bailey (1721). Nhb.[1] 'Helm o' the hill,' as it used invariably to be called, is a considerable eminence . . . a few miles south of Felton.

2. A heavy cloud which sometimes covers the top of a mountain, esp. Crossfell; also in comp. Helm-cloud.

Lakel.[1] Sometimes, when the atmosphere is quite settled, with hardly a cloud to be seen and not a breath of air stirring, a small cloud appears on the summit of the mountain, and extends itself to the north and south. The helm is then said to be on, and in a few minutes the wind is blowing so violently as to break down trees, overthrow stacks, and occasionally throw a person from his horse, or overturn a horse and cart. When the wind blows the helm seems violently agitated, though on ascending the Fell and entering it there is not much wind. Sometimes a helm forms and goes off without a wind; and there are essentially easterly winds without a helm. Cum. Gl. (1851); Cum.[4] A rolling cloud, sometimes for three or four days together, hovers over the mountain tops, the sky being clear in other parts. This helm is not dispersed or blown away by the wind, but continues in its station although a violent roaring hurricane comes tumbling down the mountain, Nicholson & Burn Hist. Antiq. Wm. and Cum. (1777) I. 7. n.Wm. It is asserted that invariably if the 'helm' remains for three consecutive days, that it will not leave before the end of nine days (B.K.). nw.Wm. Denham Tracts (ed. 1892) I. 218. Yks. Swainson Weather Flk-Lore (1873) 204.

3. A gale of wind which comes from the mountains with terrific force; also used fig.; also in comp. Helm-wind.

N.Cy.[1], Nhb.[1], Lakel.[2] Cum. What was it that distant noise like the roar of artillery,—it was the terrible Helm wind, CLARE D. Armstrong, 12; The helm wind has swept the fellside district, and its rush has been felt and even heard as far as Carlisle, Carlisle Patriot (Nov. 9, 1888) 4; Cum.[4] Wm. An t'blast o' the bugle, loud as t'wind o' the helm, WHITEHEAD Leg. (1859) 8. nw.Wm. It is also spoken of a person in a furious passion, Denham Tracts (ed. 1892) I. 218. e.Wm. GIBSON Leg. and Notes (1877) 42.

[It is prob. that this word was orig. a comp., being a form of hely how, a name for a child's caul; see JAM. (s.v. How, sb. 3).]

HELON, see Heal, v.[2]

HELOOR, sb. Sh.I. In phr. lyin' up i' de heloor, applied to a person half-awake and half-asleep in the morning before getting out of bed, and consequently sulky.

The word hel [Eng. hell] is in O.N. applied vaguely to the realm of death or the world beyond the earth. A person in the heloor is thus properly speaking a half-dreaming person whose thoughts are wandering away; then it means a person who will not speak, of which unwillingness sulkiness is most often the cause, JAKOBSEN Dial. (1897) 39.

[Norw. dial. helorar, pl., confusion, heedlessness, also in phr. Han laag i Hellioro, he lies in the realm of death, he is dead to the things of this world (AASEN); see also JAKOBSEN Norsk in Shetl. (1897) 145. ON. hel, the abode of the dead, Hades.]

HIGGLEDY-PIGGLEDY, adv. Chs. In phr. higgledy-piggledy, Maupas shot, serving all alike, making no difference between people.

Chs.[1] The following tradition accounts for the origin of the saying: 'King James I. was on a royal progress such as he was accustomed to make over various parts of his dominions. As he approached Malpas (which, be it observed, is on the high road between London and Chester) he sent forward to the Rector, as the principal person of the place, to require him to provide for his suitable entertainment. The Rector, whether, unlike his kind, disloyal, or like them, parsimonious, refused. The Curate saw his opportunity, and ordering the best viands the old "Lion" could produce, invited his Majesty to refreshment. . . . The rest of the story is less clear, and varies with different traditions. It appears, however, that at the end of the banquet there was some discussion as to settling the account. His Majesty, perhaps, desired to be generous; the Curate insisted on the rights of hospitality. Eventually, however, the ancient custom of Malpas prevailed, even if it were against the King's wishes. Half-and-half, or Higgledy Piggledy, was the time-honoured rule of the "Lion." All who came should pay equal shares or 'stand the shot' alike. Accordingly, Curate and King divided the costs of the festival, and the Malpas proverb received the sanction of royal authority. But this was not the only thing divided. The monarch, who never said a foolish thing, had a good occasion for a practical joke. If "Higgledy Piggledy" was the rule of the "Lion," it might also be the rule of the Glebe and the Tithes. "Malpas Shot" was fixed upon the unfortunate Rector, and the Curate received henceforth the mediety of the Benefice. . . . The chair in which the King is said to have sat is preserved at the "Lion." A variant of this tradition is: 'Before his invasion of England, William III. travelled in England incognito, with a view to certify himself of the state of the national feeling towards himself and his colleagues, and, coming to Malpas, betook himself to the inn for his dinner, a repast which he happened to share with the Rector and Curate of the parish. The meal over, the Curate proposed to the Rector to divide the payment of the "Shot," that of the stranger included, between them. To this the Rector, who enjoyed in the neighbourhood the reputation of being a miser, strenuously objected, exclaiming "Certainly not; higgledy piggledy, all pay alike." "By all means," chimed in the future sovereign, "higgledy piggledy, all pay alike;" and so it was arranged. But when William was seated on the throne, the Rector of Malpas, among others, made a journey to London to worship the rising sun. The King no sooner saw him than he reminded him of the incident, and compelled him to resign a moiety of the parish to his Curate, also with the title of Rector, on the principle embodied in his own apothegm 'Higgledy piggledy, all pay alike." And from that day forwards there have been two Rectors of Malpas.' The saying or proverb is frequently extended into 'Higgledy Piggledy, Malpas Shot; let every tub stand on its own bottom.' s.Chs.[1] Ig·ldi-pig·ldi, mau·pŭs shot·.

Most frequently the dice were thrown by the company, and those upon whom the lot fell were obliged to assume and maintain . . . a certain fictitious character, or to repeat a certain number of fescennine verses in a particular order. If they departed from the characters assigned, or if their memory proved treacherous in the repetition, they incurred forfeits, which were either compounded for by swallowing an additional bumper, or by paying a small sum towards the reckoning, Scott Guy M. (1815) xxxvi. Lnk. Aften in Maggy's at Hy-jinks We guzl'd Scuds, Ramsay Poems (1721) 11, ed. 1733; The . . . cup is filled to the brim, then one of the company takes a pair of dice, and after crying 'Hy-jinks,' he throws them out: the number he casts up points out the person that must drink; he who threw beginning at himself number one, and so round till the number of the person agree with that of the dice; . . then he sets the dice to him: . . he on whom they fall is obliged to drink or pay a small forfeiture in money, then throws, and so on. But if he forgets to cry 'Hy-jinks' he pays a forfeiture into the bank. Now, he on whom it falls to drink (if there be anything in the bank worth drawing) gets it all if he drinks; then with a great deal of caution he empties his cup, sweeps up the money, and orders the cup to be filled again, and then throws, for if he errs in the articles he loses the privilege of drawing the money. The articles are—(1) Drink, (2) Draw, (3) Fill, (4) Cry 'Hy-jinks,' (5) Count just, (6) Chuse your doublet, man—viz. when two equal numbers of the dice is thrown, the person whom you chuse must pay a double of the common forfeiture, and so must you when the dice is in his hand, ib. note, 21. Sus.[1] The Southdown country is always spoken of as 'The hill' by the people in the Weald. 'He's gone to the hill, harvesting.'

5. A piece of high ground entirely surrounded by water, a dry patch of elevated marsh.

e.An.[1] Nrf. If you watch them [yellow wagtails] building, you will see they have chosen a 'hill' where there is a scant crop of pin-rush and chate, EMERSON Birds (ed. 1895) 72; There are several channels marked out by posts, and they have a fair depth; but if you get out of them, you may get stuck on one of the 'hills,' as the natives term the shallow portions, DAVIES Broads (1884) 62.

6. A heap or mound of earth or rubbish, &c.

Cai.[1] Said chiefly of rubbish, or things in disorder. e.Lin. (G.G.W.), Ken.[1]

Hence to do anything out of hill and heap, phr. to fabricate or do anything out of one's own head.

e.Fif. D'ye really think at because ye've been sax moonths i' Edinbro' an' can coin a wheen lees oot o' hill an' heap, LATTO Tam Bodkin (1864) ix. Ayr. Gin thai ramstamphich, prick ma dainties . . . ware stentit to the makkin o' a tale out-o'-hill-an'-heap, I wadna fairly tho' it ware baith feckless an' fushionless, Edb. Mag. (Apr. 1821) 351 (JAM.).

7. A heap of sand gen. found by weirs. Cf. flash, v.[1] 7.

s.Cy. The phr. run to hill means that the boat has run on a heap of sand found at the tail of most of the weirs, and called on the Thames a hill—indeed this word is used all the way to London, but on the Severn it is a Tump (S.S.B.).

8. The small mound on which hops are planted, a raised bank or mound of earth. Cf. hill, v.[2] 2.

Ken.[1] Sur.[1] In planting a hop-garden, so many hills are reckoned to an acre.

9. A term applied to the oval side of a bat when it falls uppermost in tossing for an innings. e.Dur.[1]

10. A common.

w.Som.[1] Unenclosed land quite independent of its elevation. Vau·lee au·n dhu roa·ud gin ee kau·m tùe u ee·ul luyk [Follow on the road until you come to a sort of common]. In speaking of land, the climax of poverty is 'so poor's a hill.'

Hence Hill-ground, sb. unenclosed land; rough, uncultivated land.

I mind very well when 'twas all hill-ground here, so var's ever you can zee, ib.

11. Obs. A land measure, amounting to half an acre.

Sus. In the manor of Rawkmer als Lavante, Burrell MS. [in Brit. Museum] 5701 add. 155.

12. v. Of birds: to assemble, collect together on a hill or piece of high ground.

Wil. These birds [the Ruff, Machetes pugnax] are polygamous, and like the Capercailie and Blackcock select a dry hillock in the breeding season on which to 'hill,' or take their stand in defiance of all rivals. Here . . . they proclaim their readiness to combat all opponents, and challenge such to fight for possession of the somewhat dowdy-looking females assembled around, SMITH Birds (1887) 424.

1. A farm-labourer or ploughman; a farm-servant.

Sc. Monthly Mag. (1798) II. 435; Now restricted to a farm servant as distinguished from one employed in the house or in tending cattle (Jam.). Abd. A group of hinds were assembled, busily engaged in washing the fleeces of the sheep, Ruddiman Parish (1828) 60, ed. 1889. Frf. Hinds wha ha'e been labourin' hard preparin' the ground for anither crap, Lowson Guidfollow (1890) 56. Per. Baith laird and tenant, herd an' hind, Haliburton Ochil Idylls (1891) 133. Fif. Hinds, plewmen, lands, and cottar callans, Tennant Papistry (1827) 71. Ayr. Summons the hind to perform his appointed duties in the barn, White Jottings (1879) 46. Lnk. The stalwart hind went to the door, Hamilton Poems (1865) 248. Lth. The stout hind now whistles gay, Bruce Poems (1813) II. 52. Edb. Hynds to the hamlet steer, Glass Cal. Parnassus (1812) 17. Bwk. The circumstances of the country are such as to reward the toil of the hinds or labourers in this parish, with a very liberal share of the produce of the lands, Statist. Acc. XVI. 493 (Jam.). Peb. Loud 'Goosies!' everywhere resound Frae hizzy, hind, or weane, Lintoun Green (1685) 68, ed. 1817. Slk. Ministers, lairds, weavers, and poor hinds, Hogg Tales (1838) 8, ed. 1866. Dmf. Nae choice has thou o' hynde or peer, Reid Poems (1894) 72. Gall. A kind of bold, self-respecting diffidence common among our Galloway hinds, Crockett Standard Bearer (1898) 188. n.Cy. Grose (1790); N.Cy.[1] Nhb. Ralph Turnbull, hind to Mr. Thompson, Richardson Borderer's Table-bk. (1846) V. 153. e.Dur.[1], w.Yks.[1] Lan. The household were summoned, Nathaniel, his son, and two hinds, Kay-Shuttleworth Scarsdale (1860) II. 102. Sus. The hind ploughs as his fathers ploughed, Hoskyns Talpa (1852) 228, ed. 1857.

Hence (1) Hindin-work, sb. the work of a farm-servant or ploughman; (2) Hindish, adj. rustic, clumsy, clownish.

(1) Hdg. Ye'll get wages like the lave when your hindin work begins, Edwards Mod. Poets, 10th S. 337. (2) Gall. Here I give . . . a few hindish speculations, Mactaggart Encycl. (1824) 273, ed. 1876.

2. An upper farm-servant hired yearly and provided with a house; a married farm-servant.

Lth. Morton Cyclo. Agric. (1863). se.Sc. Farm labourers, engaged by the year, their wages being so much in money, with house, firing, milk, meal, and potatoes—all which things in kind go by the name of 'the benefit' (A.W.). Nhb. Hinds, male and female, having now 'bound their bargains' with their masters, were coasting round the booths and stalls, Newc. Dy. Leader (June 1, 1897) 5, col. 2; Nhb.[1] A farm servant hired by the year at so much per week. Hinds formerly had 'corn wages,' and were mostly paid in kind by the produce of the farm, which included the pasturage of a cow. Money wages are now general. At present sixteen to eighteen shillings per week, with house free, coals carted, a garden, and generally some potatoes planted on the farm or 'found' for him. At the hiring a stipulation is often made by the farmer that the hind must furnish a female field-worker at a stipulated price per day, with extra wage in harvest time. This extra hand is called a 'bondager.' Dur.[1] n.Yks.[1] Hired by the year or term, having a house rent-free in part remuneration and expected to find other labour besides his own—his wife's, or grown-up daughter's, possibly—at certain seasons of the year. In some instances, if not all, the hind has some of the responsibility of the bailiff, but works with his own hands, which the bailiff does not, or at least need not; n.Yks.[4] A sort of bailiff, in fact, but of a lower degree. ne.Yks.[1] The hind lives rent-free, and manages all or a part of the farm under the owner, working at the same time with his own hands. A farmer renting two farms usually puts a hind into the house he does not occupy. w.Yks. (J.W.), n.Lan.[1] ne.Lan.[1] One entrusted with the charge of cattle. Der. A hind, therefore, engaging to work on one of the farms belonging to the estate, has a house assigned to him, Howitt Rur. Life (1838) I. 165.

Hence Hinding, sb. an engagement, situation as a farm-labourer.

Nhb. He has tow dowters workin' oot and a full hindin' himsel', Longman's Mag. (Feb. 1897) 325.

3. A farm-bailiff or steward.

N.Cy.[1] Lakel.[1] A man put in to occupy a farmhouse where the farmer has more than one; Lakel.[2] A farm manager who lives on the farm and carries it on as a farmer would. Cum. The squire and heynd, Stagg *Misc. 3. A sprite, hobgoblin. See Hob-gob, sb. 1.

Dur. Another sprite, called Hob Headless, infested the road between Hursworth and Neasham, HENDERSON Flk-Lore (1879) vii. Lakel.[2] n.Yks.[1] Obtrush Rook, as well as Hob Hole and the Cave at Mulgrave, is distinctly said to have been 'haunted by the goblin,' who being 'a familiar and troublesome visitor to one of the farmers, and causing him much vexation and loss, he resolved to quit his house in Farndale and seek some other home. Very early in the morning, as he was trudging on his way with all his household goods and gods in a cart, he was accosted by a neighbour with "I see you are flitting."—The reply came from Hob out of the churn, "Ay, we's flitting."—On which the farmer, concluding that the change would not rid him of his visitor, turns his horse's head homewards.' Hob of the Cave at Runswick was famous for curing children of the kink-cough, when thus invoked by those who took them to his abode: 'Hob-hole Hob! Mah bairn's getten t'kin'-cough: Tak' 't off! Tak' 't off!' Hob at Hart Hall, in Glaisdale, was, as the legend bears, a farm-spirit 'of all work,' thrashing, winnowing, stamping the bigg, leading, &c. Like the rest of the tribe who ever came under mortal eye, he was without clothes—nāk't—and having had a harding-smock made and placed for him, after a few moments of—it would seem, ill-pleased—inspection, he was heard to say, 'Gin Hob mun hae nowght but a hardin' hamp, He'll come nae mair nowther to berry nor stamp'; n.Yks.[2] w.Yks. There are several localities in the township of Saddleworth, once, according to popular notions, invested with 'Old Hobs.' . . One of the parochial overseers kindly furnished me with . . . a list of the personal names and haunts, or reputed beats of the 'feorin' believed in when he was young. These comprise . . . 'Knott Hill Hob' and 'Narr Hob.' . . Hob of Knott Hill . . . was so designated on account of his having stood on that eminence on the approach of King Canute (Cnut or Knut), and ordered that monarch to march his army up the valley to the attack of Castleshaw, N. & Q. (1870) 4th S. v. 156. Der. They say giant Hobb hath ever a little un alongside o' him. . . The Hobb niver was knowed to come beyont the Dale. . . . T'other hole, where Hobb has his lodging, VERNEY Stone Edge (1868) ix.

Hrt. He hocksed me about all day. Hocksing birds' nests, CUSSANS Hist. Hrt. (1879–1881) III. 320.

7. To remove, carry off.

Nrf. A master speaking of a servant who had behaved very ill, his neighbour replied: 'If he had been my servant I'd have hox'd him off to Bridewell' (W.W.S.).

Hence (1) Aux or Hocks, int. a call used in the game of hockey; see below; (2) Hocksey, int. a call to a person to move off.

(1) Oxf. When a boy unfairly strikes the shins of another player with his stick, the boy struck exclaims 'Hocks your own,' and gives him a rap in return (G.O.). Brks. If your opponent is in the way of your swipe, you shout the warning 'aux!' and if he does not at once jump out of your way, you have a right to hit him on the leg with your hockey-stick. The word 'aux' so used has nothing to do with the word 'hockey,' because hockey is a new term for the game here. 'Bandy' was and still is, in villages, the name used (B.L.). (2) Nhp.[2]

[1. Thou schalt hoxe the horsis of hem, WYCLIF (1388) Josh. xi. 6.]

Nrf. Next day morning he met me and say . . . Have you brought your hodder? Emerson Son of Fens (1892) 109.

HODDER, sb.[2] w.Yks.[1] A heat-mist. Cf. hadder, sb.[2]

HODDIE, HODDIN, see Hoodie, Hooding.

HODDING, vbl. sb. Chs. Lin. e.An. [o·din.] In comp. (1) Hodding-scythe, obs., an implement used in clearing land from rushes; (2) -spade, a spade used in the fens.

(1) Chs. The sneath or sneyd to which the blade is fixed is about 3½ ft. long, and has one scythe-like handle, placed about 18 ins. from the top; when the work is performed one hand is placed upon the top of the sneath, and with the handle in the other the crown of the rush roots is scooped out by the convex part of the blade, Marshall Review (1818) II. 34; Chs.[1] The implement is nothing more than a short, strong scythe. The blade is about twenty inches in length, but curves in a different way to the common scythe; the edge is nearly one way of it in a straight direction from heel to point; but the flat part of the blade forms a curvature, which varies about four inches from a straight line. . . The crown of the rush roots by a smart stroke of the implement, is scooped out by the concave part of the blade, Holland View Agric. (1808) 116. (2) Lin. Morton Cyclo. Agric. (1863). e.An.[1] Nrf., Suf. Morton Cyclo. Agric. (1863). Suf. So shaped as to take up a large portion of earth entire, Rainbird Agric. (1819) 294, ed. 1849.

Frf. So called because it goes beneath the larger one at night, like a chicken under its mother, Barrie Tommy (1896) 189.

HODE, see Hide, v.[2]

HODENING, sb. Ken. Also in forms hoodening Ken.[1]; hooding Ken.[2] The name formerly given to a mumming or masquerade on Christmas Eve, still applied to the singing of carols.

'Hodening' still goes on . . . at Deal and Walmer. . . We were warned of the arrival of this creature by a very loud clapping noise, and on rushing to the street-door, saw a horse's head, supported on a pole by a man in a crawling position so as to resemble an animal, and covered in front by a coarse cloth. Nothing was done or sung by the small crowd around; and the clapping caused by the opening and shutting of the mouth continued, till the creature having been satisfied with money was driven away, Church Times (Jan. 2, 1891) 20, col. 1; The custom of 'going a hodening' at Ramsgate is now discontinued, but the singing of carols is still called 'hodening,' Brand Pop. Antiq. (ed. 1848) I. 474; Ken.[1] Formerly the farmer used to send annually round the neighbourhood the best horse under the charge of the wagoner, and that afterwards instead, a man used to represent the horse, being supplied with a tail, and with a wooden figure of a horse's head, and plenty of horse-hair for a mane. The horse's head was fitted with hob-nails for teeth; the mouth being made to open by means of a string, and in closing made a loud crack. The custom has long since ceased; Ken.[2]

HÖDER, sb. Sh.I. Also in form hoodik. The staff used by fishermen to strike the fish.

De huggistaff: the staff with which the fisherman strikes into the fish, was called at the haaf by the North Isles fishermen 'de hoodik' or 'hoder,' meaning: the threatener, JAKOBSEN Dial. (1897) 28.

[Hǿder lit. the threatener, a der. of Norw. dial. hǿta, to raise the arm in a threatening way (AASEN); see JAKOBSEN (l.c.) and Norsk in Sh. (1897) 87.]

HODGE, sb.[1] Chs. Der. Not. Lin. War. Shr. Cmb. [ɔdʒ.] 1. The paunch of a pig; see Roger. Also by extension the stomach, belly (generally).

Chs.[1] The stomach of a pig, cleaned out and eaten as tripe. s.Chs.[1] Not. A cow's stomach (J.H.B.). sw.Lin.[1] The inside of a pig's stomach; [it] is very bitter. 'Like the old woman who was told that nothing about a pig was lost, so she tried a bit of the hodge, but that bet her.' War.[2]; War.[3] He has a biggish hodge. Shr.[1] Cmb.[1] The flat portion of the 'chidlins.' 11. Curling term: a stone which does not pass over the distance score.

Sc. The stone neglects the rank And stops midway; . . ev'ry mouth Cries 'Off the hog,' GRÆME Poems in ANDERSON Poets, XI. 44 (JAM.); (G.W.) n.Sc. It seems to be denominated from its laziness. It is thrown aside, as of no account in the game (JAM.). Lth. Allan's first stone was a 'hog,' STRATHESK More Bits (ed. 1885) 271; Tak' him aff—he's a hog, ib. Gall. The trimling player stells his tramps Wi' mony a stamping stay; Af gangs his stane, and ay it clamps, But hoh portule, a hog—It grunts that day, MACTAGGART Encycl. (1824) 81, ed. 1876; If the bottom of a stone gets over this 'score,' and its upper bulb not, still that stone is no hogg. If the stones come not over this line, they are flung out of the game, ib. 274. Wgt. The willing rink watch how each stone is sent, And with deft brooms the lazy hog prevent, FRASER Poems (1885) 202; We'll soop up the stanes wi' the greatest o' pains, An' strive tae ha'e nae hogs ava, ib. 210.

Hence Hogged, ppl. adj., fig. fallen behind in substance or trade.

Rnf. The ballast o' every business has shifted; an' there's no a merchant amang us that's no hogged mair or less, Blackw. Mag. (Sept. 1822) 307 (JAM.).

12. The distance-line in the game of curling. Gen. in comp. Hog-score; also in form Hogging-score. Also used fig.

Sc. It was wholly hidden into the butcher's stone back at the hog-score, TWEEDDALE Moff (1896) 161; The score short of which your stone is a 'hog' is sometimes called the hoggin' score—usually the hog-score. So the player is 'a hog,' the score is 'the hog,' the stone is 'a hog' (G.W.); O'er far to either side Or lag ahint the hoggin' score, R. Caled. Curling Club Ann. (1887–88) 379. Frf. Feech, man, ye're no owre the hog score, INGLIS Ain Flk. (1895) 96. Per. The nineteenth century has proved, in the language of curlers, a hogscore to not a few old Scottish customs, HALIBURTON Fields (1890) 1. Ayr. But now he lays on Death's hog-score, BURNS Tam Samson (1787) st. 5. Lnk. Stan' back at the hog wi' a besom, WATSON Poems (1853) 63. Peb. Yont the hog-score, straight in the way, [He] warns, o' his flock, ilk chiel His stane to lay, Lintoun Green (1685) 38, ed. 1817. Gall. They are made in the form of a wave, and are placed one fifth part of the whole rink from either witter; that is to say, if the rink be fifty yards long from tee to tee, the hog-scores of that rink are thirty yards distant from [each other]. . . Sweeping is not allowed until the stone comes over the 'hogg,' unless by the person who played, MACTAGGART Encycl. (1824) 274, ed. 1876. n.Ir. A shot we try at 'chap an' lie,' At 'hogs' we luk sae dreary, O; Then fling the stane wi' micht an' main, LYTTLE Robin Gordon, 96.

Hence to lie at the hog-score, phr. not to be able to get over some difficulty in an undertaking. Cld. (JAM.)

13. A term used in the game of peg-tops; see below. Cf. hoges.

e.Yks.[1] When a boy throws his top down, and it spins round on its side, instead of on its peg, it is called a hog; if it becomes entangled in the string it is called a hog in a band. In either case he has to put it into the ring, to be aimed at by the other players, and it is often split up, to the great grief of the owner, MS. add. (T.H.)

14. v. To cut short the mane of a horse or pony, so that it stands straight up like a brush.

Nhp.[1] 'To hog a horse's mane,' is to cut it up on both sides to a point. War. It may sometimes but rarely happen that a hunter's mane grows so badly . . . it may be necessary to hog it, MORDAUNT & VERNEY War. Hunt (1896) I. 293. s.Wor.[1] Sus., Hmp. HOLLOWAY. Wil.[1], w.Som.[1]

Hence (1) Hog-mane, sb. a horse's mane, cut quite short, so as to stand erect; (2) -maned, ppl. adj. having the mane cut quite short.

1. The 31st of December, New Year's Eve. Also used attrib., and in comb. Hogmanay day, night, &c.

Sc. It is ordinary among some plebeians to go about from door to door upon New Year's eve, crying Hagmana, a corrupted word from the Greek Hagia-mana, which signifies the holy month, CALDER Presbyt. Eloq. (1694) 123, ed. 1847; Base popish angels, which first keept that day [Christmas] And with the herds sung the first Hoguemennay, MAIDMENT Pasquils (1868) 269; The schoolboys in those days were all expected to bring a game-cock to the annual 'main,' or fight, which was usually held on the earthen floor of the village school on Hogmanay, WRIGHT Sc. Life (1897) 42. n.Sc. Hogmanay was another of the days to be remembered in Carglen. It was the last day of the year, and we celebrated it in this wise. . . Our sports did not begin until the evening. We would form a party of four or five, thoroughly disguise ourselves, and then sally forth, going from house to house. We boldly entered the kitchen, shouting lustily—'Rise up, good wife, and shak' yer feathers, Dinna think that we are beggars: We are guid folks come to play, Rise up, an' gie us Hogmanay.' Then we boldly insisted upon kissing every unmarried female in the room, claiming at the same time from the 'guid-wife'. . . hogmanay more specifically, in the form of refreshment, GORDON Carglen (1891) 292. Bnff. About Yule-time an' Hogmenai, TAYLOR Poems (1787) 44. Abd. Jist last Hogmanay Nicht, as usual a gay nicht, OGG Willie Waly (1873) 41. Frf. Hogmanay is the mighty winter festival of Thrums, BARRIE Tommy (1896) 77; About fifty years ago, it was a common custom for the youths in the country villages to go round amongst their better-off neighbours on Hogmanay night, disguised as guisers, partly for sport and also for the purpose of getting something nice to eat. The version of the rhyme then employed by them in the parish of Kirkden was as follows:—'Get up, guideman, and be na sweer, And deal your bread as lang 's you're here; The day will come when you'll be dead, You'll neither care for meal nor bread,' N. & Q. (1878) 5th S. x. 278. Per. I cam' to remind you That this is Hogmanay, STEWART Character (1857) 160. w.Sc. On the 31st Dec., all household work was stopped, rock emptied, yarn reeled and hanked, and wheel and reel put into an outhouse. The house itself was white-washed and cleaned. A block of wood or large piece of coal was put on the fire about ten p.m. so that it would be burning briskly before the household retired to bed. The last thing done by those who possessed a cow or horse was to visit the byre or stable, and I have been told it was the practice with some, twenty years before my recollection, to say the Lord's Prayer during this visit, Napier Flk-Lore (1879) 159. Fif. Saunders was sitting in his easy chair at the side of a blazing fire on Auld Hogmanay night, Robertson Provost (1894) 92. Rnf. 'Twas fear they micht forget themsels, Puir me sae anxious made, That on that scowlin' Hogmanay At hame they wad ha' stayed, Young Pictures (1865) 19. Ayr. Blithe and ree frae New 'er's day to Hogmanae, Galt Gilhaize (1823) v. Lnk. We renounce Hallow-even, Hogmynae night, Valentine's even, Wodrow Ch. Antiq. (ed. 1777) 164. n.Yks. The refrain of the Richmond 'Hagmena song' sung on New Year's eve is, 'Sing, fellows, sing, Hagman-heigh,' Dixon Sngs. Eng. Peas. (1846) 186, ed. 1857.

2. The offering for which children go round and beg on New Year's Eve; a New Year's gift.

Sc. Hogmanay trollolay, Give us of your white bread and none of your grey, Get up and gie's our hogmanay, Chambers Pop. Rhymes (1870) 165. ne.Sc. On the last night of the year the children . . . went into the houses asking their hogminay, Gregor Flk-Lore (1881) 162. Frf. We are bairns come to play—Get up an' gie's oor Hogmanay, Inglis Ain Flk. (1895) 107. w.Sc. Rise up, gudewife, and shake your feathers, Dinna think that we are beggars, We're girls and boys come out to-day, For to get our Hogmanay, Hogmanay, trol-lol-lay. Give us of your white bread, and not of your grey, Or else we'll knock at your door a' day, Napier Flk-Lore (1879) 154. s.Sc. At one time [the custom was] very prevalent in Sc., not on New Year's Day, but on Old Year's Day, under the name of Hogmanay. In the south of Scotland it has greatly fallen off, but in various rural districts it is still observed to a limited extent. The children go in companies, chiefly to houses of people of the better class, and repeat the simple rhyme:—'My feet's cauld, my shoon's thin, Gie's my cakes an' let's rin.'... It was not money that was given and expected, but a cake and perhaps a bit of cheese—sometimes, no doubt, oat cake, but more gen. a bit of wheat-flour cake baked with currants and raisins. On Dec. 30 last I saw a basket containing perhaps 50 currant rolls, about the size of an ordinary penny roll, ready to give to the children who might call next day on their hogmanay errand, N. & Q. (1878) 5th S. x. 59. N.Cy.[1] Nhb. The New Year's offering for which children beg. Their common inquiry is, 'Please will you give us wor hogamanay?' Or, varying this, they chant: 'Hogamanay, hogamanay, Gis wor breed-an'-cheese, an' set's away' (R.O.H.); Nhb.[1] In n.Nhb. the hogmanay is a small cake given to children on Old Year's Day; or the spice bread and cheese, with liquor, given away, on the same day. Lakel.[2] Ah've come ta lait mi hag-ma-na. Cum. In some parts of Cum., a number of boys and girls, on the eve of New Year Day, go about from house to house, singing a sort of carol, of which the following lines are the first couplet: 'Hagnuna, Trolola, Give us some pie, and let us go away.' When they receive their present of pie, they depart peaceably, wishing the donor a Happy New Year, Sanderson Essay, 59, in Anderson Poems (ed. 1820) I. Cum., Wm. Nicolson (1677) Trans. R. Lit. Soc. (1868) IX. Yks. Hagman-heigh, a local New-Year's custom, of demanding a Christmas box; formerly on behalf of the hagman, or wood cutter, in consideration of an extra supply of fuel at Christmas. 'To-night it is the new year's night, to-morrow is the day, Sing, fellows, sing, Hagman-Heigh,' Hone Table-bk. (1827) 8.

HOLLIN, see Hallan, sb.[1]

HOLLING, sb. Wm. The eve of the Feast of Epiphany, Twelfth Night, Jan. 5; also called Holling Day. See Hollin.

So called at Brough, where there is an annual procession of an ash-tree lighted on the top of its branches, to which combustible matter has been tied. This custom is in commemoration of the Star of the wise men of the East (Hall.); N. & Q. (1899) 9th S. iii. 108; For a full account of the ceremonies by which 'Holling' or 'Holly Night' are celebrated at Brough see Hone Table-bk. (1838) III. 26; Wm.[1] The last time it was observed 'was the year of the Crimean War' (1854 or 1855). An ash-tree, with suitable branches, was peeled, and to each branch was attached a torch made of rushes dipped in oil. At 8 o'clock in the evening this tree, lighted, was carried in procession from the 'Swan' Inn twice round the town, by one of the strongest men, and brought to the central bridge. Here, in the presence of hundreds of spectators, a fierce struggle for the possession of the tree took place between two parties, one for the 'Swan,' the other for the 'Black Bull.' Whichever house won supplied free drink for a while. The ceremony ended in Bacchanalian disorder. The tree was formerly associated with the Star of Bethlehem. The night on which the ceremony took place was called 'Hol(l)in-night.' [Holling Day, Jan. 5, in the Purse Almanack (1898) (Crane & Co.).]

HOLLY, sb. Nhb. Wm. Yks. Pem. Ken. In comp. (1) Holly-beating, obs., an old custom at Tenby on St. Stephen's Day; (2) -boy, ? obs., a figure made of holly burnt by girls upon Valentine's Day; (3) -brash, a bright transient flame; (4) -bussing, the custom of fetching holly from a wood with music and dancing on Easter Tuesday; (5) -dance, a dance at Christmas; (6) -night, Twelfth Night; see below; (7) -tree, a tree having lighted torches on each branch, carried in procession on Twelfth Night; see below.

(1) Pem. N. & Q. (1872) 4th S. x. 267; The custom was for men and boys to parade the streets of Tenby with branches of holly wherewith to beat the bare arms of any chance females, who usually chanced to be domestic servants. It was purely a local custom and did not obtain elsewhere in the county (H.O.); At Tenby, 50 years ago, all maid-servants wore short sleeves, pulling linen slips over their bare arms when waiting at table, &c. On St. Stephen's Day the boys used to cut branches of holly and with these belabour such maids as they found in the streets with bare arms. This custom may have the same origin as the blooding of horses on St. Stephen's Day, i. e. shedding blood in honour of the Protomartyr (E.L.). (2) Ken. N. & Q. (1880) 6th S. i. 129; Ken.[1] It was the custom on Shrove Tuesday in West Kent to have two figures in the form of a boy and girl, made one of holly, the other of ivy. A group of girls engaged themselves in one part of a village in burning the holly-boy, which they had stolen from the boys, while the boys were to be found in another part of the village burning the ivy-girl, which they had stolen from the girls, the ceremony being, in both cases, accompanied by loud huzzas; Ken.[2] (3) w.Yks.[1] Such as that caused by burning holly. (4) Nhb. A very ancient custom that still obtains at Netherwitton. On Easter Tuesday the lads and lasses of the village and vicinity meet; and . . . proceed to the wood to get holly, with which some decorate a stone cross that stands in the village, while others are 'bobbing around' to 'Speed the Plough' or 'Birnie Bouzle,' N. & Q. (1857) 2nd S. iii. 344; Brand Pop. Antiq. (ed. 1870) I. 101. (5) n.Yks.[2] When the holly-bough is a decoration. (6) Wm. [So called from] the ancient custom of carrying the 'Holly-tree' on Twelfth Night at Brough, Hone Table-bk. (ed. 1838) 26. (7) Wm. Formerly the 'Holly-tree' at Brough was really 'holly,' but ash being abundant the latter is now substituted. . . The . . . townspeople mostly lend their assistance in preparing the tree, to every branch of which they fasten a torch. About eight o'clock in the evening it is taken to a convenient part of the town, where the torches are lighted, the town band accompanying and playing till all is completed, when it is removed to the lower end of the town, and after divers salutes and huzzas from the spectators is carried up and down the town in stately procession, usually by a person of renowned strength, named Joseph Ling, ib.
